Last summer, I went to visit my aunt Mary who lives in Scotland. My train was not full, so I got into an empty compartment and started to read. A young man who looked like a businessman got into the same compartment.

Shortly after the train left the station, he started a conversation, and went on telling me about the people who bought cars from him in many different towns and cities. After more than half an hour, he was still talking and I thought that he was never going to stop. I felt very bored and it was impossible for me to continue with my book.
