READ THIS TEXT AND ANSWER THE QUESTIONS.

From Morocco, the two cyclists cycled on into Algeria-and it was there that their adventure turned to disaster because neither cyclist was prepared for the freezing temperature in the hills of North Africa.

The night became colder and colder until one night, they found it impossible to sleep. "We lay there wearing every article of clothing we had with us and wrapped up in our sleeping bags, but it was no good. We just couldn't get warm. Since our tent had no ground sheet, we were lying on the frozen ground and it just seemed to get colder and colder."

By the early hours of the next morning, with their hands and feet completely numb, they could bear it no longer.

"All I could feel was a terrible burning sensation in my fingers," said Rick.

They decided to warm up by cycling on, but it only lasted for a few minutes. A mile down the road, Rick, who was in front, came to a halt... and fell to the ground and lay in the snow.

Horrified, David jumped off his bike and ran to his friend's rescue. Desperately he worked to make his companion regain his consciousness. For a while there was no response.

Eventually Rick opened his eyes ... but he was clearly in danger. His face was blue and he was shivering violently.

Then something happened which they will never forget. Out of nowhere, there appeared a man on a horse. He was an Algerian and couldn't speak a word of English, but he took control of the situation immediately. He lifted Rick up onto the horse and began to ride off down the road, and stopped at last at a large camp in the mountains.

"Without the help of that man, I am convinced that Rick could have died," said David. "It took Rick three hours to warm up properly in front of the fire."
